Museums: to Charge or not to Charge?

Nowadays many museums charge for admissions while others are free. It is obvious because every work should be paid off, but on the other hand we have free museums that you can meet and not ~~to~~ pay for this. So what is the advantages and disadvantages of charging for admission to museums?

First of all we should understand that everything around us was made by people who sacrificed their time and strength for the ~~end~~ result. So in my opinion charging for admission is like giving a charity to them who built this museum, received paintings and sculptures here and told you everything about this masterpieces.

Someone can say that waste your money to look at paintings that you can easily find on the Internet is stupid. As for me looking at them on the Internet is not similar to feelings that you gain in the museum. I might even say that every free museums should start to charge for admission because of the atmosphere and hard work that was given for realisation.

Last time when I visited museum, there was a couple of tourists that was angry about the value for admission. "It's embarrassing! We have already paid for travelling abroad! Why should we pay for our entertainment?" - said one of them.

By the way I can actually agree with ~~him~~. Visiting museums can be problematic for tourists when it comes to find a free one.

Charging for admissions to museums is not bad thing. First of all it's showing respect for workers, but when it comes to tourists then we can make free museums for them.
