Hello! My name is Anna Gorzova. I live in Khabarovsk, Russia and I am currently a member of the journalist club „Far East's Pride“, in which I, along with other students from local universities, study journalism and make a newspaper with articles on many different topics.

A few days ago, the editors of an international student magazine have asked us to write an article under the title „Museums: to Charge or not to Charge?“.

Indeed, this question has been on my mind for quite a while.

Nowadays, when people are much more interested in researching certain subjects using phone, instead of going to museums, many of museums started to cut their workers paycheck or even closing an entire museum!

I personally think that advantages of charging people for admission to museums outweigh the disadvantages. The charge for entering a museum usually is not that big.

First of all, by using money from charges, museum workers are able to receive a stable paycheck, meaning that they will not quit their jobs. This also implies that ^{new} many potential employers will consider working in museums too!

Secondly of all, money from charges is used to cover such things as electricity ^{and} water taxes and even buy some additional historical items for their ^{collection}, such as old books, artefacts or even bones of an old creature, than were found during archaeological researches!

My friend Misha once tried to apply for a guide position at the local museum, but was denied because museum was suffering from financial problems due to a pandemic situation. Misha had to start to look for another job that had less payment than the previous one.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the charge at museums is, overall, a good thing. We contribute our money to a good cause, because without them museums all over the country would close.
